

LONDON FASHION WEEK: NICOLE FAHRI FALL WINTER 2012

Written By: Lynn Furge, Senior Fashion Editor
Photos Courtesy of Catwalking.com

There was something very bird like in Nicole Fahri's Fall Winter 2012 collection. Taking the lines of the wing and forming it into dramatic hemlines on asymmetrical peplums. Placing little tech plastic feathers on the interiors of arms; creating patterns of a full "coat" within jacquards.

Even folds on some pencil skirts looked like the origami folds of resting cranes. The palette was warm and rich, golds, taupes, chocolates, grays and white (a current London Fashion Week trend) with bursts of metallic. All tones seen in nature and all living happily in as one in this display of chic and shape. Each look was graceful whether it was embellished or just one clean line.

