

//DDD//VERA WANG FALL 2012

Written By: Lynn Furge, Senior Fashion Editor
Photos By: Billy Rood for www.figphoto.net

Softer, simpler, those were the strong points of Vera Wang's Fall Winter 2012 Collection. Sure there were her trademark tucked, draped and wrapped moments, as though thin sheets of tissue paper were folded around the model's body but it was the boot cut trousers and "half" suit jackets that had a mix of tailoring against the gentle chiffon that really told the tale.

Deconstructed but perfectly thought out. Contradictions where muted greys and nudes mingled with essential pops of persimmon, the lush fluff of fox opposing the sleek architectural hand work of the tone-on-tone embroidery that even looked soft because of the sheen of the thread. Hitting the trend of shearing full force Wang's jackets and vests were cool, modern, young and shaped in a new elongated way without being thick. A beautiful rendition of what Vera Wang does... impeccable.

